THE INTELLIGENCER.

WHEELING, JUNE 6, 1898.
CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE.

The Republican Congressional Committee of the First Congressional District will meet at the office of the secretary, 147 Chapline street, Wheeling, on Tuesday, June 7, at 7:30 p. m., to fix the time and place and complete the arrangements for a convention to nominate a candidate for Congress.

C. D. ELLIOT, Chairman.
W. J. W. COWDEN, Secretary.

Flag of the free heart's hope and home!
By angel hands to valor given;
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
And all thy hues were born in Heaven.
Forever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe but falls before us;
With Freedom's soul beneath our feet,
And Freedom's banner streaming o'er us?

—Joseph Rodman Drake.

Eight American Heroes.

The history of wars furnishes no incident of valor and utter fearlessness surpassing the splendid act performed by Lieutenant Richmond P. Hobson and his heroic crew of seven volunteer seamen in the entrance to the harbor of Santiago de Cuba. The performance gave a thrilling chapter of courage and voluntary willingness to face almost certain death to the glorious record of heroism which is the history of American naval warfare. It is a pity that in the first reports of the brave deed which has provoked the admiration of the world, and even won congratulations from the commander of the Spanish war fleet, against which the movement was directed, the names of those who composed the little crew of volunteers under Lieutenant Hobson were omitted. Each and every one of them is as worthy to be honored as a hero as his brave commander is, and all will be so honored by the government and the people.

It is not surprising that a performance of such courage as to cause the Spanish commander to send a flag of truce in recognition of the bravery of this crew of his American enemies, and to assure the American commander that they would be treated with consideration while prisoners in his hands, should challenge the admiration of the world. Admiral Sampson called for eight volunteers to perform the perilous mission of taking an unarmed and unarmored vessel, a bulk used merely as a coal transport, into the mouth of death, amid a storm of shells and cannon shot, hurled from powerful engines of destruction, and to sink her in a narrow channel, itself planted with deadly mines, and take their chances of escape. When this summons came, it is to the glory of the American navy and the honor of the country that, not the eight men necessary alone responded to the call, but that every man on board the American fleet, 4,000 in all, volunteered, while some pled to have the honor, and many were disappointed that they were not selected. Not in all history has there been an incident more inspiring and exhibiting a more daring spirit, and none has there been which more strikingly showed the loyalty of seamen to their country's cause.

The feat that was accomplished, and which won admiration even from the enemy, was of greater significance than as an historic exhibition of American heroism. It was a case of the men who undertook the task appreciating the full meaning of the necessity and importance of the movement, and its possible bearing upon the general results of the war, to that degree that they were willing and even anxious and proud to offer their lives for the sacrifice. Are not the exploit and its results enough to warrant the belief that the ruling hand of Providence must have guided these men in their undertaking for the American cause in a war for a better civilization?

The significance as affecting the war situation is vital. It made certain the complete bottling up of the Spanish war fleet, and rendered it, temporarily at least, as harmless as if it were at the bottom of the sea. It was, to use the language of a correspondent, the "placing of the stopper in the bottle, with the collier Merrimack as the cork." In the meantime, the American nation will not ignore the claims of the eight heroes who performed this remarkable feat to be honored as they deserve. Prompt measures for their exchange and restoration to their fleet, and their promotion tion and appropriate recognition by Congress will be applauded by the country.

Chief of Spanish Spies.

If the published letter from Lieutenant Carranza, the naval attaché to the Spanish legation at Washington, is authentic, it will go far toward confirming the charge, heretofore made, that he is the manager of the Spanish spy system in this country. Carranza is the individual who challenged General Fitzhugh Lee and Admiral Sigbee on account of their expressed convictions that the Maine explosion was due to Spanish treachery, and since he left Washington has been located in Canada, and has been all along suspected of directing the spies in this country from that base.

The letter alleging to have been stolen from Carranza in Montreal, and which was published a day or two since, if it can be proven genuine, is sufficient to warrant his expulsion from the Dominion by the Canadian authorities. It is a complete exposure of the hand the officer has been playing, and intimates that he is disgusted with his employment. He is anxious to get into active naval service against the Yankees, and is confident, according to his letter, that he can not only make a record for himself, but, Spaniard like, can "make it pay," in a financial sense.

The letter is interesting as an intelligent review of the naval operations and also as expressive of disgust at certain plans of his own government. It also contains a frank admission that he doubts Spanish success except on a peace basis yielding Cuba to the United States. The letter, which is written to a rear admiral in the Spanish navy, while it contains no information harmful to the United States, is incriminating, as confirmatory of the charges that have been made against Carranza.

It is announced this morning that negotiations are pending which will result in the expulsion of Carranza from Canadian territory on representations by this government.

One Chivalrous Spaniard.

Let us pause, in our general denunciation of Spanish character and methods of warfare, to pay tribute to the one chivalrous Spanish commander who has shown himself deserving of the title in all the war thus far and during the events leading up to it. The action of Admiral Cervera in sending, under a flag of truce, his chief of staff to the American flag ship, with a message to Admiral Sampson that the heroes of the American exploit were safe and would be protected as prisoners of war, and also recognizing their bravery, may be regarded by some as a piece of shrewd diplomacy; but however it may be regarded in that sense, it will live in history as the act of a true warrior. In thus characterizing it, and in appreciating it as an act of chivalry, we are doing no more than the Spanish commander did in recognizing in an unusual manner an historic act of American heroism, performed by men who had delivered him an effective and disastrous blow.

Education in West Virginia.

The commencement season is on in full force and these days are witnessing the annual exercises of some of the most important of the institutions of West Virginia, including the chief one of all of those supported by the state—the University at Morgantown. The University is closing the most successful year in its history. The normal schools, also, every one of them, show up with splendid records. These schools have contributed wonderfully to the state's educational progress. Besides these, are the various institutions, which, although not fostered by the state government, enjoy something more than a state reputation, and which will finish the records of prosperous years this week and next.

In this vicinity we have the famous Mount de Chantal Seminary, which has contributed so much to the culture of West Virginia and has sent abroad its influence yearly; Bethany College, historic institution; the Linsly Institute, the oldest of all, and the influence of which through generations has been reflected in the lives of so many men who are prominent in the business and professional circles of the city. Then there are the high schools in this and other important points of the state, the various private, denominational and sectarian colleges and schools, all contributing to the enlightenment, the progress and the culture of our state, which, with each year, takes a step farther toward the front among the most advanced commonwealths, industrially and intellectually, in the great Union of sisters, now engaged in a war, sad as the fact is in this connection, for the dominance of civilization and education over ignorance and semi-barbarism.

West Virginia, with her splendid public school system, advancing on progressive lines and intelligently administered, her elite institutions for higher education, both public and private, is marching in perfect step with the advance guard.

How Peace may Come.

The Spanish newspapers are exulting over an article in the Paris edition of the New York Herald advocating peace. They construe it as meaning that the United States government is "appalled at the magnitude of the struggle and is anxious to escape from a terrible dilemma." This is very amusing in view of the situation. It is almost incredible that the Spanish press should be ignorant of the fact that neither the Paris edition, nor any other edition of the New York Herald, is authorized to speak for the United States government, to say nothing of the fact that it in no sense reflects the sentiment of the people of the United States on this vital issue.

It is true the people of this country want peace, for that is what they are fighting for, but it never will be true that they are frightened at a "terrible dilemma," for none has yet presented itself, so far as the physical contest with Spain is concerned. It is curious that the dispatch which thus quotes the Spanish press also details how the Spanish statesmen would welcome the idea of peace, even with the sacrifice of Cuba, if they could only save the Philippines and Puerto Rico, and not be required to pay too high an indemnity.

This attitude of Spanish statesmen is due to the financial "terrible dilemma" that the government of Spain is facing, for it is absolutely powerless to borrow money to pay the expenses of the war. The Spanish bankers admit that it will be as impossible to float a government loan sufficient for the purpose in their own country as it has been to negotiate for financial aid in other countries. The French bankers are now demanding the pound of flesh before they will so much as discuss a Spanish loan—terms which the government of the Dons cannot comply with, except by making sacrifices which would mean greater hardships than the loss of important colonial possessions.

This situation is an important factor in the conditions that are shaping toward an ending of the war. There are some things developing daily which are contributing, so far as Spain is concerned, to the accomplishment of the purpose of the war by the United States, and they are not all connected directly with the movements of the fleets and the army.

The Intelligencer, with all good Republicans, sincerely hopes that the unpleasantness which exists in Lewis county, growing out of an unfortunate contest in choosing delegates to the congressional district nominating convention, may not continue longer than the time necessary to heal whatever differences exist. Contesting delegations, whatever the cause, are never conducive to party harmony or the party welfare. The Republicans of Lewis are no less loyal to Republicanism, because they differ as to choice of candidates, and we are sure there is no desire on any side to jeopardize party interests if there is a way to adjust misunderstandings.

Considering the short time in which the war has been in progress and the few opportunities which have presented themselves, heroes are being rapidly developed on the American side. There may be willing ones on the Spanish side, but the elusive and almost cowardly policy of the Spanish authorities so far has afforded them no opportunities. We

ADMIRAL CERVERA.

If Ever Man Was in a Tight Place, He Is That Man, Now.

A great many people will be surprised to learn that Admiral Cervera is well acquainted with the United States. Fifteen years ago he was a naval attaché at Washington, and was a favorite in Washington society.

Now the admiral visits this continent again, under different conditions. He comes not as a friend, but as a foe, and instead of being heralded with pomp and met with ceremony, he is obliged to sneak here on the quiet, like a stowaway on the ocean.

If cornered in Santiago de Cuba, Admiral Cervera is penned up tighter than are told that Spanish seamen are brave. It isn't their fault, then, that the government is pursuing a dodging policy.

The Bombardment of San Juan.

Although the first search of Admiral Sampson for Cervera's elusive squadron proved a bitter disappointment to the Americans, it was full of incidents interesting enough to the general public. Chief among these events was the bombardment of the town of San Juan, on the island of Porto Rico, which took place on May 12, and gave to Sampson's fleet its first opportunity to engage concertedly in actual warfare. An illustration by Chapman, reproduced today from Harper's Weekly, affords a vivid picture of the affair.

The American squadron was composed of ten battle ships, monitors and cruisers. During the night of May 11 they approached San Juan from the northwest, and on the morning of the 12th all hands were called and breakfast served at 3 o'clock. The men then knew that gunpowder was to be burned, and they were correspondingly jubilant. With the first rays of dawn the call to quarters was sounded, and the final preparations made for active work on the Spanish fortifications which protect the harbor. Headed by the Iowa, which had been selected by Admiral Sampson as his flagship, the formidable column of fighting boats made three circuits before the forts, pouring in their fire at an average range of about 1,800 yards. The guns of the enemy were worked vigorously, but with the usual result. Not since modern rifles with gun sights were invented has any one seen such shooting as from the shore batteries of San Juan. The count rose into the hundreds.

with never a hit, and it was difficult for the commander in chief to prevent the smaller, unprotected cruisers from recklessly exposing themselves to possible destruction by running close to the shore. On the American side the marksmanship was effective after the range was secured, and most of the works were damaged, and the guns of the Morro silenced. The last shot was fired at 5 o'clock, and the order to retire was reluctantly obeyed.

It is hard to form any idea of the value of the short bombardment. In connection with the withdrawal of the fleet, it must be remembered that the admiral had reason to expect an engagement with the fleet of the enemy, and this covered many obvious reasons for not continuing the bombardment of San Juan. Apparently the battle was an incident of the war, like the action at Matanzas, proving again the lack of training of the Spanish and the coolness and ability of the Americans. Only two of the several hundred shots by the enemy were felt by our ships.
